

Histories of the internet. Online-culture(s) and the impact on offline-life.

Dear madam or sir,

This actual phase of our culture is highly affected by constant availability on a variety of channels.

Smartphone, Netbook, tablet, Wifi or app are keywords of our society.

Does this development change society, culture, science and communication? In what way?

Internet as a topic offers a bunch of facets and is predestinated for a broad scientific approach.

For this reason the editor board of NORDEUROPAforum is interested in publishing articles with a personal approach on the topic internet.

You as author are pretty free in your choice of subject as well as method.

What's important for us is the concrete phrasing of your scientific problem and your recognizable method.

Being a cultural-scientific magazine, we are mostly interested in the following questions, respectively topics:

- E-Governance
- Upgrowth of the internet (are they different from nation to nation?)
- Comparison of the internet-usage between two or more as nation defined in the (Northern) European context
- The influence/importance of an open web-culture for the scientific discourse
- representation of history in the internet

Regarding the formal expectations:

Please send your abstract first. It shouldn't be longer than one page. The deadline for abstracts is 14 days from today.

We publish in German and English, please choose one of these languages to write.

Preferably, articles should not exceed 40,000 characters (including whitespace). The outline should have no more than three levels. Additionally, please enclose a short summary of your article (maximum 1,000 characters) in German and/or English, as well as some information about your field of science and vita (one or two sentences).

We operate with an anonymous peer-review-process, which means before your article comes into consideration for a publication two external reviewers evaluate your manuscript.

In case you are interested in publishing some of your work at NORDEUROPAforum, we are very pleased.

I will gladly send you further informations with regards to the stylesheet or content or other questions.

Feel free to contact me!

*On behalf of the editor board,
Karina Henschel, CvD
karina.henschel@hu-berlin.de*